Did you Know?

- * Bats wait until dusk to venture out of their roosts to hunt for insects and water. Bats, like bees, birds, and butterflies, are also pollinators.
- * Coyotes communicate using a wide variety of sounds. While they are best known for their howling, they also yip, bark, huff, whine, woof, squeal, wail, and growl.
- * Wild hogs can smell food 25 feet underground. And from distances of nearly 7 miles away!
- * Even though toucans are birds, they have very small wings. This means they can only fly short distances, resulting in more of a hop.
- * Howler monkeys spend almost as much time hiding in the trees as sloths, but that doesn't mean they are shy. Their howl can be heard 3 miles away, making them the loudest (land) animals in the world!
- * Sloths aren't lazy, they're just efficient. At their quickest, sloths can move approximately 10 feet per minute. Measure 10 feet and set your timer for one minute. Now you, too, can move like a jungle sloth!
- * Elephants recognize their own reflections in water and mirrors.
- * The black and white stripe patterns on zebras are as unique as snowflakes and finger prints.
- * Cheetahs have 2,000 to 3,000 spots on their magnificent coats.
- * Emperor penguins are excellent deep sea divers and can hold their breath underwater for up to 20 minutes.
- * Although, rockhopper penguins are the smallest of the Antarctic penguins (measuring 20 inches), they are also known to be the most outgoing.
- * Even though we cannot see penguins ears, they have excellent hearing. Their ears consist of holes which are covered with a plume of feathers.
